THE ETHICS OF THE PROFESSIONS AND OF BUSINESS

Modern social and business relations are as manifold as they are farflung. To assure reliance and to state ideals the codes of ethics of professions and the newer ethical codes of business become of great public importance. Industrial expansion and social progress are limited by the standards of business and professional conduct that guide men and women when engaged in making a living. To the expression and betterment of these standards this volume is devoted.

MUD HOLLOW

By SIMON N. PATTEN

MUD HOLLOW presents the truths of psychology applied to our every-day experience. Sex, its conflicts, heredity, the creative life, muscles, nerves, environment and freedom,—all these newer ideas are marshalled forth and their conflicts depicted. What American youth goes through before it understands its own flesh—its own thought, its own soul—holds our interest to the end.

Dr. Patten's novel strikes off the shackles which bind the individual to his lower self. He delineates the attributes which lift man from "Mud Hollow" and its conformity, to a world-evolving freedom.

"Know Thyself"

MUD HOLLOW enables you to do it in the light of our new psychology

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS WITH A DEDICATION

THIS volume of the "Annals" owes its value to the service ideal of each member of the committee whose names are given on the opposite page. The content and point of view of this volume were both new. Here and there individuals within the professions had given thought to the place and value of a code, each for his own profession, but few even of these had thought of the service value of the standards of conduct reflected in those codes to other professions or to business generally. The volume required consultation and repeated searches for contributors and topics and codes on the part of all the members of this committee. Many not only helped with suggestions and advice but also undertook the preparation of articles themselves. To all of these the officers of the Academy render grateful acknowledgments.

The services of this committee are not to end with the publication of this volume. The members of the committee have dedicated themselves to the cause of the betterment of ethical standards among the professions and in business. To this end they will keep themselves in touch with and aid when possible the attempts of all organizations everywhere to attain and maintain high standards of social conduct. With the active support of the many hundreds of loyal and active Academy members everywhere, such services are sure to bring ample returns. For the stability and worthwhileness of our social and industrial life depend upon the standards of conduct of men and women when engaged in making a living.
